
Renowned Researcher Christophe Vanroelen Assumes Prestigious Professorship at BRISPO

Christophe Vanroelen has embarked on a new chapter as Professor at BRISPO, the Brussels Institute for Social and Population Studies, situated at the esteemed Vrije Universiteit Brussel.

Vanroelen's expertise lies in the intricate dynamics of socio-economic variances in health within the working population. His pioneering research delves into the nexus between health differentials and various work and employment conditions, with a keen focus on unstable employment circumstances and work intensity.

Not merely confined to groundbreaking research, Vanroelen is also a seasoned educator, imparting knowledge in introductory sociology, welfare state policies, and labour sociology to budding scholars.

His illustrious journey to this elevation includes a distinguished tenure at Vrije Universiteit Brussel, spanning over a decade, where he contributed significantly as a Professor in Interface Demography. Before this, he honed his research acumen through roles as a Postdoctoral Researcher and Scientific Researcher.

Vanroelen's academic prowess extends beyond borders, evident from his concurrent role as a Postdoctoral Researcher at Universitat Pompeu Fabra, where he has continued to make waves in the scholarly realm for over a decade.
