“Choosing the winners this year has been particularly difficult because of the very high standards and quality of all submitted entries,” said Dr Lawrence Lai, Honorary Member of the International Hospital Federation (IHF) and a chair of the international jury. “This year, we’ve come up with what I believe to be the best set of winners from a good spread of countries.” Dr Lai stressed that some countries were doing better than others and extended his heartiest congratulations to the UAE, a winner of five awards this year.

Since the Awards was first presented in Chicago, USA in 2015, the IHF has been recognising hospitals and healthcare organisations for their excellence, innovations, and outstanding achievements in the healthcare industry. This year, it attracted 121 entries from 34 countries. As a result of an extensive review by the jury of health leaders from around the world, 27 finalists were selected which have now received the IHF/Dr. Kwang Tae Kim Grand Award and Excellence Awards in Corporate Social Responsibility, Leadership and Management in Healthcare, and Quality & Safety and Patient-centered Care (Gold, Silver, Bronze and Merit).
